TERMS OF USAGE.

-----

The Society of Exploration Geophysicists (SEG) owns worldwide copyright to the paper and the source code published as supplemental material unless the author(s) chose to publish the article with a Creative Commons license instead of transferring copyright to SEG or documentation associated with the code specifically states otherwise. All material to which SEG owns copyright may be used freely under the following terms of use:

1) If the software is used in the creation of a publication or software distribution, or in any substantive way in a formal presentation, the GEOPHYSICS paper associated with the software must be referenced, and the Digital Object Identifier (DOI) must be included in the reference.

2) Notices in the source code indicating the origin of the code may not be removed.

Disclaimers, copyright, and patent notices in the code may not be removed.

Source-code files should contain:

A one-line SEG copyright notice.

A link to this disclaimer online at <https://seg.org/Publications/Journals/-Geophysics/Information-for-Authors>.

A DOI link to the paper.

3) If any portion of a code is imported into another routine in either its original form or in modified form, the block of code containing that material must be clearly noted and attributed. The attribution must include, at a minimum, a reference to the GEOPHYSICS paper associated with the software and the paper's DOI, plus the URL for the disclaimer (<https://seg.org/Publications/Journals/-Geophysics/Information-for-Authors>). If any part of the algorithm is restricted in its use by patents, the patents must be referenced and the terms of use documented.

4) If any part of the source code is modified and then redistributed, clear notice must be included indicating that the code has been modified. The notice should include the nature of the modification, the extent of the modification, the purpose of the modification, when the modification was done, who made the modification, and the affiliation of the party that made the modification. Such notices should not be removed during successive redistributions.
